

STILL BRECKENRIDGE

Mrs. Blackburn, at which the defendant was not accompanied by Miss Pollard, the defendant said that he did not recollect saying what Mrs. Blackburn said, but that he had noticed she was shocked when he had announced his engagement; he did not recall her saying that this was a poor return for so much devotion as he received. His recollection was that Mrs. Blackburn said that he had been fortunate in the devotion he had received and hoped in this second marriage he would be no less fortunate. He did not recall that he had told Mrs. Blackburn that he had thought he had discovered Miss Pollard's feelings toward him, and as a man of honor there was nothing for him to do but to offer her his hand. He said he believed he had spoken of Miss Pollard's friendly condition. He was doing, he said, all he could to carry out the agreement he had made with the plaintiff, and to the next interview with Mrs. Blackburn, when they were talking about where Miss Pollard should go, and what would be best, the defendant said that he had spoken of going to Europe. In that conversation Mrs. Blackburn spoke of her own intention of going to Europe. In that conversation Mrs. Blackburn said it might be pleasant if the plaintiff could meet them in Europe, and Mrs. Blackburn had thereupon said that she and her sister preferred not to be hampered or travel with a party. He did not recall the words Mrs. Blackburn testified to having used warning him that she could have nothing to do with the affair, if he was too attentive or did anything likely to make a scandal. The witness said that in the conversation Mrs. Blackburn had spoken of the talk that might be excited, and from the defendant had urged Mrs. Blackburn to add him in getting the plaintiff to stay and remain away from Washington until their marriage—for he was constantly leaving Mrs. Blackburn under the impression that he was going to marry the plaintiff.

"I was honestly," said the defendant, "if I can use such an expression, trying to carry out my agreement with the plaintiff."

"You were honestly trying to deceive Mrs. Blackburn?" said Mr. Wilson.

"Yes," said Mr. Breckinridge, "I was honestly trying to deceive her. I therefore do not blame Mrs. Blackburn for feeling some acerbity about the case."

HIS RECOLLECTION DIFFERENT.

Mr. Wilson continued to go over other statements made by Mrs. Blackburn in that and other interviews.

As to the statement that Mrs. Blackburn had made that the defendant had told her that Miss Pollard was worrying herself and himself by her jealousy, and asked her to endeavor to allay her jealousy, the defendant said that the form in which Mrs. Blackburn put the conversation did not accord with his recollection. He had spoken of Miss Pollard's being worried and in bad health. The defendant said if the word jealousy was used it was used by Mrs. Blackburn. Mr. Wilson read several statements made by Mrs. Blackburn about the matter of jealousy, in which the defendant was represented as discussing the word of affection had passed between him and Mrs. Wing, and had declared his intention of going to Kentucky when Congress adjourned and arranging for his future marriage.

The defendant said Mrs. Blackburn had put together two or three conversations as occurring at one time. Mrs. Blackburn's statement, he said, were an absolute mistake. Mrs. Blackburn's recollection. No such conversation as a whole had occurred.

Mr. Wilson directed the witness to answer more directly, and objection was made by Mr. Thompson to his requiring the witness to answer in a word, after reading to him a long deposition.

Mr. Wilson said all he wanted was to have the defendant answer the question and not to make speeches.

Mr. Breckinridge said he was willing and desirous of answering the questions. He desired that he had ever told Mrs. Blackburn that he was going to marry Mrs. Wing, and had no intention of marrying her. He had not spoken to her of Mrs. Wing until after his marriage with Mrs. Wing, and that was after Congress adjourned.

"Do you deny the truth of Mrs. Blackburn's statement?" asked Mr. Wilson.

"I do not," said Mr. Breckinridge, "in the sense of saying that she has testified falsely. I do say that she got several conversations combined and that she has been led into error by faulty recollection."

He thought Mrs. Blackburn had also confused statements he had made to Miss Pollard with statements he had made to him. He did not think Mrs. Blackburn had or would make use of the word "jealousy" in the manner described. He did not think a lady would do that in her own apartments.

Mr. Wilson asked if he did not think the word could appropriately be used by a lady if the circumstances justified it and called for such a term, and the defendant said it might, he thought, be used.

The conversation in which Mrs. Blackburn testified that she had said she did not keep him from marrying her, and withdrew her protection, the defendant said occurred substantially as Mrs. Blackburn had told it, except at another time and under other circumstances. His collection of Mrs. Blackburn's language was that she said, "I wash my hands of the whole transaction."

"SOME SUPERB ACTING."

The interview at which Mrs. Pollard asked him to name a day for their marriage, occurred, the defendant said, the night of Sunday, May 14th. Mrs. Blackburn, he said, had given an account of a scene which did really happen, but not exactly according to defendant's recollection. There was some superb acting.

"On whose part?" said Mr. Wilson.

"Miss Pollard's, Mrs. Blackburn's, or your own?"

"On Miss Pollard's part, and some, undoubtedly, on mine. Miss Pollard, however introduced some things which were not down on the bill."

The defendant then went on to describe how Miss Pollard had come over, knelt down beside him and asked him to name the day of their marriage. The defendant had said: "I will not name the day." Mrs. Blackburn had said: "Take your seat," and the defendant said: "I will name the day." Mrs. Blackburn had said: "I will name the day." Mrs. Blackburn had said: "I will name the day."

He said the plaintiff had gone a step further than their agreement called for in undertaking to have him name a day for their marriage. He resented this and declined to name a day.

Mrs. Blackburn's recollection of this interview quoted herself as saying that she had said to the plaintiff that as Mr. Breckinridge had asked her to name a day for their marriage, and she would follow him wherever he went. He then told her that she was pursuing a blackmailing scheme, when she said that he should not talk in that way to her. She was then more excited, and exclaimed that unless he then promised to marry her, she would create a scene. He replied, "Very well. Go on, then we will both be turned out on the street."

The defendant then recounted at great length how she calmed down some, and that they went down to the H-street house, where they talked the matter over. She said that she was then very much excited, and he also became somewhat excited and angry. He told her again that he could not, would not marry her.

Thereupon, explained the defendant, the plaintiff became still more excited, and begged, and told him that if he did not then say that he would marry her, she would open the window and alarm the neighborhood.

JUDGES BRADLEY ANGRY.

After a consultation between Colonel Breckinridge and Judge Bradley, the latter, by said he thought the case of the defense might end at that point, but he asked that the court adjourn in order to give the defense time to consult a lawyer. He said that he would not be present at the trial. The usual hour had not arrived, but Judge Bradley agreed to the adjournment. The court was formally announced that the court was adjourned, however, the crowd began to move out.

Then Judge Bradley became angry, and stiffening up he cried: "Take your seats; go back there; look off your hats!"

This was the introduction to a scorching lecture to the spectators, in which he said that the curiosity exhibited by them had been disgusting. The corridors had been crowded by people and crowds had assembled before the doors of counsel. The defendant, he said, was also on trial for their common sense and decency, and I am ashamed to say that their conduct was a reflection on the verdict of the jury.

There was apparently a foul murder committed at an early hour this morning. For about a month past a negro girl by the name of Lee has rented a room from Mollie White, who occupies a house of ill-repute at the corner of Locust and Exchange alleys. Last evening between 6 and 7 o'clock she left the house and shortly afterwards was arrested by Officer Rice, charged with being a suspicious character. When arrested she was attempting to pawn a gold watch at Jacob's pawnshop.

This morning about 120 o'clock Mollie White, who conducts the house at which the woman lived, wanted a whisk-broom, and attempted to get into her room to clean it. She found the door fastened, and being unable to unlock it, she forced the door open, and entering the room her first stroke struck a man's hat, and on taking it to the light she saw that it was covered with blood. She then got a lamp and went into the room, and found pools of blood on the floor. On looking under the bed she discovered what she at first thought was a body propped up by the lifeless corpse of a white man apparently 45 or 50 years of age. He was attired only in his underclothes, and these were saturated with blood.

Upon finding that the man was dead, she immediately notified the police, who in turn notified Coroner Taylor.

Mollie White, as well as the other inmates of the house, disclaim any knowledge of the man—who he is, when he came there, or how long he had been there.

It is very remarkable that the man's clothes are nowhere to be found, and the supposition is that it was his watch that the girl, Lee, was attempting to pawn when arrested.

Vaccination Troubles. (Happannock Times.)

The following questions were sent to Attorney-General R. Taylor Scott:

1. Has a teacher the legal right to exclude a child from the public school when the parents refuse to allow it to be vaccinated?

2. If, in the opinion of the parent, the child is in such a state of health that it is dangerous to expose it to the disease and its communication to the school children, in my opinion, to exclude a child simply because not vaccinated, would not be a proper exercise of the teacher's discretionary powers.

Superintendent Massey concurs in the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Rhode Island Republican.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 4.—Practically complete returns show that Brown (Republican), for Governor, will be elected by 4,500 plurality. It was a Republican landslide, and the Democratic rout is complete. The Rhode Island State ticket is elected. The Assembly is overwhelmingly Republican.

Massachusetts has spent $500,000 in efforts to exterminate the English sparrow, and when a resolution was introduced in the Senate the other day to provide for the propagation of the Mongolian pheasant in the Commonwealth the members displayed much caution and asked many questions before voting. One wanted to know where Mongolia was, and another asked whether the pheasants would increase as rapidly as the sparrows and the gipsy moths.

At Rest.

J. ALLSTON COOKE breathed his last—goes to rest—after a long and painful illness, with patience and Christian forbearance. He was a living sermon to both young and old. He was a true friend, affectionate child, loving brother, and so patient and appreciative to all who administered to his comfort during his last illness. He was one of the grandest characters, wonderful mind, clear to his last hours. He asked for his old friends by name to come bid him goodbye, and meet him on the other shore beyond the river.
